Suspect at large in Bell Circle shooting

The West Sacramento Police Department is still searching for shooting suspect Zishan Shamid Malik, 19, of West Sacramento.

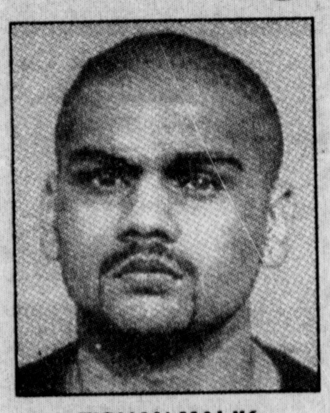

Malik is believed to have been involved in a Jan. 10 incident in which two men used a handgun to fire nine rounds, hitting two houses on Bell Circle and narrowly avoiding causing injury to inhabitants.

Fellow suspect David Carter, 21, is in custody.

Police are still trying to determine a motive for the shooting.

Malik is described as 5' 9" tall, 160 pounds, with black hair and brown eyes. He is considered armed and dangerous.

The charge of attempted murder has been added to charges of consiracy and shooting into an inhabited dwelling filed against Carter.

Board adds three years to school chief Kelleher's contract

Following a closed-door session described as an evaluation of the performance of the district superintendent Jan. 13, the Washington Unified School District trustees announced that they had extended his current one-year contract by an additional three years.

Dr. Dennis Kelleher, who has been at the helm of the district since the board allowed the previous superintendent's contract to run out in 1997, is now engaged for his services halfway through 2001.

Because no raise was included as part of the contract extension, the board was able to take the action as part of an agenda item on his performance evaluation.

Kelleher will continue with a base salary of approximately $95,000 per year, a $500 per month expense account including vehicle use, and benefits.

In other school district news:

■ David Farmer, one of five eligible applicants who sought appointment to the vacancy on the school board in November, has announced he will run for the seat in the election now scheduled for June 2. The same seat is due up a regularly-scheduled election in November of this year. Farmer is a lieutenant in the West Sacramento Police Department.

No immediate word has come from other potential candidates.

■ The signatures on the petition which called for that special election are protected from public view. But the petition's proponents are public record, and are listed as: Marino Pierucci, Mary Pierucci, Elsa Glenn, Evelyn Benson and Milton Lane, Jr.

Davis approves replacement for shelter

Facility would replace Harper House; lawsuit over site still possible

By Steve Marschke

Harper House may at last be heading for replacement.

The West Sacramento house (at a location kept confidential for security reasons) will soon be phased out of duty as a shelter for women and children fleeing a violent home, and replace with a 6,400 square foot new shelter in south Davis.

The sponsor of Harper House, the non-profit group Yolo County Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence Center, has won a permit for the new building in Davis following a political battle with neighbors at the proposed site.

"The final decision was approved (by the Davis City Council) with changes to the roof design," said Jean Jordan, the agency's executive director. "But the neighborhood opposition is still very strong and they have 30 days to file a lawsuit, so we're not certain of anything yet."

Jordan hopes the new facility is not further contested, because Harper House in West Sacramento is in need of repair and is too small to serve the county's clientele, typically abused women and their children needing a temporary safe haven from their abusers.

The proposed new site is donated by Davis developers as part of a requirement to promote affordable housing, and is next door to a planned housing complex to be built by the National Handicapped Housing Institute.

Months of hearings on the shelter proposal in Davis have led to heavy opposition from nearby residents, and widespread publicity surrounding the site.

Ironically, opponents have used this publicity as another reason to oppose the shelter's Davis location.

"It's almost hypocritical to say, 'If we raise a big enough fuss the site won't be a secret anymore and we can't do it here,' " said Jordan. A goal of the shelter's sponsors is to minimize the chance that abusers may stalk their victims and follow them to the shelter if they know its exact location.

Jordan said that the West Sacramento Police Department added credence to the shelter's claims that the facility doesn't attract trouble in its present location in West Sacramento.

"Police Chief Larry Gore and Lt. Dave Farmer made a public statement that in over 17 years we've been in West Sacramento, they haven't seen an increase in crime in the area," said Jordan.

Lt. Farmer agreed that there are apparently no records of any serious incidents at the Harper House.

If the Davis shelter proceeds as planned, the doors will be open around the end of the year. West Sacramento's Harper House would be converted to an out-patient service center for the same clientele, but would drop its use as lodging.

Clients are referred to the shelter through many channels, said Jordan, including law enforcement, a 24-hour crisis line, the court system and private therapists. The largest number of Harper House's clients come from West Sacramento, said Jordan, with Woodland residents using the service second-most and Davis residents third-most.

Happy Halloween?

Visitors to the banks of the Sacramento River were treated to an unusual sight last week:

Hundreds of pumpkins, apparently swept away from some upstream farm, washed ashore or tangled themselves up in riverside debris. The specimens at right were spotted next to the river near Gregory Ave. and South River Road.

Although some commentators offered the opinion that the squashes were some kind of gourd, and not pumpkins, at least one local man begged to differ.

Correction

A News-Ledger article last week referred to an open principal's position at a West Sacramento elementary school. That statement was in error; the only current open position is at the district's middle school. Golden State Middle School principal Diane Smith is being transferred to a principal's position at the new Southport Elementary School, creating the opening.

The News-Ledger regrets the error.

Just how do you hang yourself with your underwear?

My Back Pages

By Daryl Fisher

I was at a wedding reception the other evening when an old friend I hadn't seen in ages (I'll call him Jim) suddenly strolled up, drink in hand, and kindly complimented me on a recent column I had written about how West Sacramento got its bad reputation. Before I could thank him he added, "But how come you never write about any of the important stuff, you know, the real news?"

"Like what?" I asked him.

"Well, you know, like what's going on with Saddam Hussein, or President Clinton, or the Unabomber?"

"Hey," I asked with genuine interest, "what is going on with that old Unabomber these days, anyway?"

"Well," began the lengthy reply, "the presiding judge wants him to keep his federal defenders and there's going to be a big hearing on it next week. Everything was going pretty good until he asked the court to let him represent himself. I guess he didn't want his lawyers trying to save his life with a defense based on mental illness. Apparently he's always been scared to death that people will think he's nuts. Anyway, some psychiatrist from the federal Bureau of Prisons is examining him to see if he is competent enough to stand trial and act as his own attorney. She's got to figure out if he can understand the proceedings and assist in his own defense."

As our conversation continued, I was also reminded that the Unabomber is a Harvard graduate with a genius IQ of 170 who briefly taught mathematics at UC Berkeley before electing to become a hermit some 30 years ago and that his anarchist crusade took three lives and resulted in injuries to 23 other people over the course of about 17 years. "He's definitely a paranoid schizophrenic," concluded Jim.

"But maybe he's not nuts at all," I suggested. "Maybe he's just like most killers -- mean and totally indifferent to the suffering of others?"

"Oh, no," said Jim with authority, "Kaczynski's a paranoid schizophrenic alright -- he has all the classic symptoms. He has delusions, he's angry, argumentative, violent, the whole ball of wax. There's no way somebody as mentally ill as he is should get the death penalty. If you ask me, he should spend the rest of his life in an institution for the criminally insane. What do you think?"

"Well," I said as politely as I could, "I'm afraid there's only one tiny aspect of the whole Unabomber case which really interests me."

"What's that?" asked Jim.

"Do you remember when he tried to commit suicide the other day?" I asked.

"Yeah. He tried to hang himself in his jail cell. But what's so interesting about that? People are always trying to commit suicide in prison."

"But the Unabomber tried to hang himself with his own underwear."

"Yeah. So?"

"So don't you find that just a little strange?"

"How so?"

"Well, to begin with, how does a person go about hanging himself with his underwear? I mean, I just don't see how it's possible. I've given it quite a bit of thought, and I just can't figure out how he went about it. None of the newspapers or television stations seemed to cover it in much depth, either. They didn't even say if he was he wearing briefs or boxers."

"Now what would that have to do with anything?"

"Well," I said, "boxers tend to have a much larger fly hole, and maybe he stuck his head through that?"

"Kaczynski didn't stick his head through his fly hole," said Jim, slowly shaking his head from side to side.

"Then what do you think he did do?"

"I don't know, maybe he used the elastic or something."

"But how?"

"How should I know?"

"I mean, the only painful thing I've ever done to myself with my underwear is give myself an occasional wedgie."

"Look," said Jim, obviously not very pleased with the direction of our conversation, "I just hope the guy gets a fair trial, that's all."

"You know what I hope?"

"No, what?"

"I hope the new underwear they gave him will be sturdy enough to do the trick the next time around."

Super Bowl XXXII, featuring the defending Super Bowl champion Green Bay Packers against the Denver Broncos, is set to go on Sunday, Jan. 25 at 3:18 p.m. (Ch. 3) at Qualcomm Stadium in beautiful San Diego.

These two teams will do battle before almost 800 million television viewers in 188 countries and in 17 languages. Tickets for the Super Bowl game cost $275-$350 (face value) but ticket brokers around the country will be reselling tickets for $900 to $5,000 depending on seat location!

If you are fortunate enough to find tickets at a decent price or if you can afford the brokers' prices, the NFL will provide you with a once in a lifetime half-time experience, featuring entertainment from recording stars from Motown and 1,600 dancers.

I think you might be better off watching the game on TV for free.

Did you know the NFL kicked around the idea of showing the Super Bowl game on a pay-per-view basis? Don't worry, the TV executives decided to pay the NFL $17.6 billion on a new eight-year contract for the rights to telecast their football games. Did you know ads on this year's Super Bowl sold out two months ago at $2.6 million per minute? This is the highest priced commercial time ever on television.

Enough talk about money. Let's get to the game and questions and answers leading up to the AFC's quest to win their first Super Bowl game in 14 years. As a matter of fact, the AFC has lost 16 out of the last 17 games!

Question: who was the last AFC team to win a Super Bowl?

Answer: In 1984, the Los Angeles Raiders won Super Bowl XVIII, beating the Washington Redskins 38-9 in Tampa Bay! The Raiders are the only AFC team to win a Super Bowl in the lat 17 years! They beat the Eagles 27-10 in 1981 as the Oakland Raiders.

Question: Do the AFC champion Denver Broncos have a chance of winning Super Bowl XXXII?

Answer: Yes, if they win the turnover battle with Green Bay! After researching the facts, I found out that the last NFC turnover in a Super Bowl game was in 1994. Four years and 14 quarters ago! In 13 years of NFC dominance, the AFC has made 44 turnovers to the NFC's 10. In the past three games, it has been 10-0 for the NFC teams.

The AFC's quarterbacks (Marino, Elway, Kelly, etc.) during this 13 year drought, have 12 touchdown passes and 30 interceptions. The NFC QB's (Montana, Aikman, Young and Favre) have 24 TDs and one interception. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out why the AFC has been losing!

Question: Can the underdog DEnver Broncos even cover the 13-point spread?

Answer: Yes, the NFC as the favorite has won 11 of the last 13 games, but the AFC has won or tied the spread in the last three Super Bowl games. They're getting closer to a win each year!

Prediction: The last big upset was 28 years ago, when Joe Namath predicted a win and led his New York Jets to a 16-7 victory over the 21-point favorite Baltimore Colts.

Here's my pick: Denver QB John Elway will shock the 800 million viewers around the world with his MVP performance in a stunning 23-17 upset over Green Bay!

(p.s. - just in case you take the Broncos, get all the points you can, you'll probably need them to win your wager!)

See ya next week!

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial

Necessary vote

When it became known that a local school board seat would become prematurely vacant last November, this newspaper opined that the remaining school board members should exercise their option of filling the vacant seat by appointment. After all, there was only a year left in the term, and calling for a special election would have cost about $25,000, it was estimated.

At the same time, it was hoped that the board would hold an open-minded selection process for the seat, and search for someone who could bring fresh ideas to the board. That hope now appears naive.

They did opt to use the appointment process and received applications from five eligible citizens for the seat, but it soon became apparent that only one of the citizens -- one with ties to the board -- was truly being considered. Sure enough, that candidate was chosen by the three-vote board majority.

Critics protested, and the board majority's reaction to that criticism further proved that an abuse of power was taking place. There is no need to recap those actions and events; they are already well documented. But a couple of "red herring" issues were thrown out by the board majority and their supporters -- issues of racism and of the expense of an election. The real issue was clearly one of power, not money and not racism.

Despite an attempt at harassment by at least one board member, several local organizers went ahead with a petition drive to invalidate the board's choice for the post and call for a special election.

They have succeeded. With over 200 valid signatures on the petition, the issue of who will fill the remainder of the vacant school board seat will now go to a special election in June.

In looking at the bigger issue of responsiveness and trust in the local school board, this election will be a small positive step in bringing an out-of-control school board back into control. And the free election of a fifth board member could even result in the change of composition of the school board's majority within a year, for reasons that may later become clear, even though none of those in the majority are scheduled for re-election soon.

The issue of the cost of a special election has been mitigated somewhat by the county's decision to combine the vote with the June primary, reducing its expense to an estimated $12,500 (despite last week's school district statement pegging the bill erroneously at $25,000).

Those concerned with this sum ought to review how quickly the same fiscally-minded board members who are now concerned about a $12,500 to $13,000 election (which they had the power to avoid) were able to spend $20,000 on a contract to raise test scores among local students, in a meeting at which the necessary information was made public only at the last moment and two board members abstained from the vote altogether because they weren't comfortable with the information.

It's not the money.

West Sacramento has a problem. After a relatively quiet year, it once again finds itself with a school board which lacks the confidence of too many of its citizens. Hopes for a school bond issue -- a long shot in West Sacramento in the best of circumstances -- are effectively dead until this changes.

Perhaps the special June election will provide an opportunity to begin this change.

Clean the city's house

Again and again any attempt to better West Sacramento City is put to rest by uncaring and selfish interests. I'm referring to the motel tax issue. "Just let it be and time will solve it" states our inept mayor accd. to the Bee that's the attitude that has brought this city so far down.

I have been a citizen of West Sacramento for 61 years and cannot remember a more, special interest, inept form of government than we have at present. Buying up little prices of property, planting trees on them and getting them off the tax role is our forte. If it wasn't for that large developers at Highway 80 and Money Store we would have absolutely no growth at all. Everything the city has talked about, for some reason never gets started.

I would hope that we clean house next election. And rid the city of ineptness and lackadaisical special interest persons. We need to be positive and grow into a fine city.

Teacher's union responds

In response to the news article, "Contract process defended" (News-Ledger, Jan. 14), I am resubmitting for publication the text of my remarks made at the WUSD school board meeting on December 9, 1997:

On behalf of the teachers of this district I am here to respond to the board's concern about low test scores as evidenced by Dr. Grignon's presentation. We are glad that the board is showing a commitment to the setting of high standards, something the teachers have long been seeking.

What a luxury it will be for teachers to have standards that both teachers and students can be held accountable to!

The teachers want to be sure, however, that test scores improve because of broad-based improvements in curriculum and not through a narrow focus on preparing for a particular standardized test.

To do this, we feel that 3 components must be in place. We call them the ABC's:

1) Academic standards that are based on state frameworks;

2) Basic curriculum that is aligned with the state standards; and

3) Consistency of curriculum and policies.

The state has just adopted language arts and math standards. As a matter of fact, some teachers have already gotten the frameworks off the Internet and are beginning to adjust their own lesson/unit planning.

Several staff members have been trained to align our grade level standards and curriculum with the new state framework and the standardized test. These folks have both the knowledge and commitment to develop and implement a program which will significantly improve student performance. Our teachers have already built the foundation for such a program and the district need not pay $20,000 to an outside consultant for 20 days work.

Historically, the problem has been the lack of consistency and an unwillingness by the district to hold students accountable. The successful implementation of these programs depends on the commitment and support of the community, the board, the district administration, and the site administrators.

Finally, several schools, such as Bryte and Alyce Norman, are already using test preparedness, such as power drills, scoring high, and testwiseness, and these schools' continual improvement has been recognized through the "Achieving Schools" program.

I would like to leave you with two thoughts?

Teachers want to be a part of the process. Who better than us knows more about the children we serve -- someone from outside the district or a representative group currently working in the district.

A shared vision is not something announced on high and passed down. On the contrary, it is created by embracing the values of the people working in the district and thereby fostering genuine commitment rather than compliance.

Free play

I'm writing to you as a past president of West Sacramento Little League. I am very concerned with the cost of little league registration going up. In past years, the price was $25.00, then $35.00, then $40.00, and now this year $50.00 per child, with no breaks for the second child.

The board says, "Well, not many people have complained about it, so there isn't a problem." Wrong! The problem I see is that this will greatly affect low income children because their parents may not be able to pay these outrageous fees but are too proud to say so. Therefore, the kids that we really need to get into this program will not be able to play. But, you see, what the board of directors does not want you to know is that in the rule book it states that, "At no time should payment of any fee be a prerequisite for participation in the little league program." Yet they tell you that if you don't pay, you will not be a member in good standing. I would also like to say that if they did a better job of managing the funds for this league, they would not have to raise the fees. Proof being that Washington Little League's fees are $35.00 for one child and $30.00 for the second child and only 60% of their children pay any fee. They also do not have a Christmas tree lot that raises anywhere from $5,000 to $8,000 per year.

So, please, if you have a child that would like to play little league but you cannot pay these ridiculous fees, go ahead and sign them up. If you have questions about this, do not hesitate to call me at 372-9391 and I will make sure your child gets to play. Thank you.

Local history. . .

The special sections of the Bee celebrating the 150th anniversary of the discovery of gold naturally gives due recognition to the part played by John A. Sutter and James Marshall. But the role of the person who established that the metal nuggets were indeed gold was not mentioned.

That person was Jennie Wimmer, who came overland to Sutter's Fort with the Harlan-Young Party in 1846 with her family. When, on January 24 in 1848, James Marshall was trying to determine whether the pieces he was picking up in the deepened millrace at Coloma was gold or something else, Mrs. Wimmer offered to test it. She had been raised in Georgia, near the town of Milledgeville, where a branch U.S. mint was established, and was familiar with the metal. She persuaded Marshall to put the nuggets and flakes in the kettle holding lye for making soap, to see if they would turn black (pyrites) or stay bright (gold). The next morning, at the bottom of the soap-making kettle, the metal was bright.

Descendants of Jennie and Peter Wimmer included the late Virgil Wimmer, who lived in West Sacramento and his grandson, Jeff Bozeman and great-granddaughter, Kelsey Bozeman, currently residents of West Sacramento.

The Oakland Museum's exhibit including the Wimmer nugget on the gold rush will start next weekend and will come to the Crocker in Sacramento on May 31, until September 13.

In praise of a volunteer

She is a wife, a mother, and a friend. She is the cheerleader advisor for the River City cheerleaders, and the West Sacramento Bears.

She started this when our daughter was a junior in high school. Our daughter is now 18 and a first year cheerleader at Sacramento City College. I thought she might give this job up, but I was wrong.

She has devoted herself to these girls and the school with 100% of her time. She makes sure that the cheerleaders always give 110% effort. She goes to every game, taking her own car to get the girls, and sometimes the parents, to the games.

Most of the time I don't get to see her until late or early the next morning. Our phone is constantly ringing, and it is always an important call for her. Our house is loaded with cheerleading stuff, and all of this is worse around tryouts.

Tryouts are definitely the worse. There is loud music always playing, cheerleaders are always over trying to find the right music, people coming in and out of the house. There is always fast food on the table. It is total madness!

It probably sounds like I am complaining, well I guess I am. Sometimes I get pretty mad and tell her that she spends too much of her time doing this for girls who give her a hard time. I had hoped she would have stopped doing this by now, but then I realized that she is very good at what she does and I should be proud of her. Well, I am very proud of her. I don't show it, but I do respect her a lot. I don't want her to give this up because she loves it so much.

I guess you are wondering how I know her so well. That is because she is my wife of 16 years. She is Leslie Pruitt. Now that you all know her, let's all say job well done and stay with it!

To her I would like to say:

I am sorry for all of the heartaches I have caused you. I wish the high school, or even the city, would give such an award to thank you for your time and effort, but maybe I should give you one.

You are outstanding in what you do, so don't give it up. I am so proud of you. (More than you know!!) I think you have definitely earned a cruise to Mexico, so you could relax a little bit.

Leslie, I wrote this so you can see the words and not just hear them. I believe in you! Love your husband, always and forever.

Motel tax issue

The January 14 city council meeting was dominated by "the future of motels on West Capitol Ave." Motel owners argued that City should return 2%, or one-sixth of the present 12% TOT (transit-occupied tax). Or increase the TOT from 12% to 14% and return that difference to the Motel Association, to finance advertising to increase business. Motel Assn. advocates argued that motels generated about 5 times the revenues to other local businesses what motels took in. This last point must be viewed with skepticism, since West Sac just does not have major retail outlets to generate such sales and tax.

Rather, when SSI recipients pay about $500/month for a motel room (3/4 of their $677/month check) and run out of money after about 10 days, their needs for balance is a "negative cash flow."

While City Council and most West Sacramentans would like to see West Capitol Ave. get a face lift and see many motel frontages replaced with retail outlets that would keep/increase West Sac's share of sales tax dollars, one potential solution has not yet been discussed to any degree: Where has West Sac's "redevelopment money" gone over our more than 10 years as a City? Tens of millions (in bonds?) have been issued to support big development like Lighthouse Marina (hello...) and we're still waiting for and (I was told on the 14 of this month) "The interest-free bonds City issues for project infrastructure does not cost taxpayers anything; City is just a pass-thru agency for such bonds, again, no risk to City."

So since we can create "mythical, financial, non-profit 'monsters'" to help get rid of the unwanted buildings and bring in something new - that we supposedly want - why can't we do the same with some of the motels? Once we decide we want something else where some motels, etc. are, why can't affected motel owners be made an offer that may offer them a chance to participate in the new business rather than "just buying them out?" Or come up with a plan that allows them - as a group - to run one or more of those new businesses...including training? Thus far, from the motel owners' point of view: Continue the status quo or (the fear of) being bought out by the City for too little. And what's their future after that? Answers to questions like these should produce more cooperation than received thus far.

KINGS from p. 3

Mitch Richmond is still on top of the list. Bad news for the Kings: when the Charlotte Hornets were rumored to be shopping center Viade Divac to the Kings for Olden Polynice, but Divac blew his knee out on Saturday night and will be out for two months. No deal!

Good news for Kings fans, maybe: the Maloof family of New Mexico, former owners of the Rockets, purchased 25 percent of the Kings for $37.5 million and might consider buying a bigger piece of the team.

The partial sale of the team and Arco Arena will generate cash to improve the team and possibly build a sports and entertainment center on arena property. Or does that mean they could move the team to another city?

The NBA's all-star 2ball contest during the All Star weekend now has a full roster for the inaugural competition in New York. All-Star 2ball involved NBA and WNBA players from the same city. There will be eight cities competing in the 2ball contest. It is played by two players (one male, one female) on a half court market with six shooting locations worth different point totals. Mitch Richmond and Ruth Bolton-Holifield (Monarchs) will represent the Sacramento teams.

The Kings' next home game is on Mon., Jan. 26, against Seattle. Tickets for all Kings home games are available by calling BASS ticket outlets, or just stop by the Arco Arena Box Office.

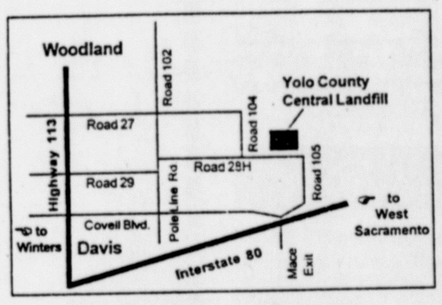

See ya at the ARCO.
